Infant Poisoning.

The country is now flooded with soothing siraps, all of which are said to be beneficial in their effects. The terrible death-rates in all sections of the land, but especially in the cities, among infants and young children, renders the subject of infantile remedies of very great importance, and it should engage the consideration of the public as it does, and indeed very seriously, too, that of physicians. Mothers and purses are becoming more and more accustomed to resort to the use of soothing sirups. This tendency is so grievous a one that the attention of those who have the care of young children should be called to the subject, and they should closely examine the motives which lead to its employment that they may understand the immediate and remote effects which are hable to accrue from its continued use.

The peculiar soothing nature of this class of drugs is derived from opium. The reasons for the use of these remedies, given by a correspondent writing on the subject, may be briefly summed up as follows:

Mothers do not like to be disturbed (especially fashionable ones) by crying infants. From this social class, down through the whole grade, to the poor women who are obliged to murder their children in order to earn a subsistence for them, and to the nurses who go about caring for children with no thought for the welfare of their charges, only influenced by pecuniary considerations, the writer claims are administering nostrums without regard to the terrible results which are sure to follow. That nurses in many instances are culpable in this respect there can be no doubt. That they are all so is not true. As a class they are probably as rehable as the majority of hired help, and when they use soothing sirup, in most cases it is done without the remotest idea of its being deleterions in its effects. But the general charge of eriminality should not be made against any mother, though, perhaps, in isolated cases, it in plain, lace and Persian stripes. These styles may exist. We are inclined to believe that sheer ignorance is the real cause; and though it may be considered crimical to be ignorant upon may be considered criminal to be ignorant upon matters of this kind, there are many just ex-

The soothing sirups are advertised in every respectable paper in the country as perfectly harmless. Mothers who have reared children in comparative good health, having used the article very judiciously, pronounce the op-position to its use all bosh. By these, and similar reasons, are mothers wofully deceived. The safe course to pursue is to act upon the principal-perhaps not always a correct onethat all widely advertised patent medicines are essentially quack remedies, and should not be used. Probably soothing sirups, if administered discreetly, would produce no apparent injury. The greatest evil is the undue quantities given; and if these nostrums were all that were claimed for them, the entire ignorance of the power or effect of given doses upon children of different ages, habits, and constitutions cannot but create error and bad results. This matter is an all-important one, and a very little investigation will convince the most obtuse person that any medicines containing epiates or narcotics should not be administered to infants except in extreme cases. Medical authority is settled on this point, and know too well the long train of evils that result from the use of such remedies. Will all who hold the health and life of children in their hands profit by these facts, and not wait for bitter experience to demonstrate their truth. - Wash.

Chronicle. A SOUTHERN DINNER TABLE. - Let me invite you first into the dining-room, and we will there see how a Southern lady arranges her table. If she is a Virginian, or of Virginia parentage, she will have put in order in the morning all of the silver and glass she will need on the dinner table, and will have seen that the salt-cellars, plates, dishes and cruets are filled—see introduction to Mrs. Randolph's "Virginia Housewife"—but still the table will need her superintendence before the guests are invited in. Of course the servant has to set the table, but it requires a lady's taste to give it an inviting appearance; and as tastes differ, want to show what a Southern lady thinks essential to make her table appear well .-North, South, East or West, the first article essential to a nice dinner is a spotless table cloth; next, clean, bright silver, glass and steel; and in them a bright show of flowers, sometimes crowning the caster and sometimes arranged in wreaths around the dishes or in tiny louquets on each plate. Some put a bouquet in the tolds of the finger napkin, and place that in the gobiet at each cover, but that is an abominable custom, as flowers are apt to have lugs in them and no one likes to drink out of a class in which an insect has taken a walk. But do have some flowers somewhere, for they give a cheerful look to even the plainest table, and relieve the naked look the table must have whilst it contains little that is edible except the soup. For while we of the South are little given to ceremony, and most of us despise from the bottom of our heart a dinner in courses, we like to eat things bot, so we have the meats and vegetables kept on the stove, while we eat it is too thick to drink) our vegetable soup, called in Virginia a "Brunswick stew," and down here in Louisiana "gumbo." Our housekeepers try to give to the table a decorated apbearance while it is devoid of substantials. So all of the vegetables that are eaten raw are placed upon the table before dinner. Generally a dish of tomatoes, cut but not seasoned, is placed upon one side of the caster, and a dish cucumbers upon the other side, and small salad plates are put by each dish, for few peothe like to have the vinegar mixed up with their other food. Cold light bread, sliced in thick slices, is put upon the table, and every kind of seasoning that will be needed. - Hearth and Home.
